

It is essential for the health of democracy to maintain a variety of voices in the information arena. Emasculating the present ownership rules to make it viable for one or fewer ownership(s) of media outlets will curtail avenues of information and harm the ability of citizens to make intelligent informed decisions about their government and their lives. Thus, I am strongly against altering or eliminating rules governing the ownership of broadcast and print media.